A Meeting of the Different Lodges-Met With a Painful Accident. Death of an Old Lady-Personals and Notes.

MANCHESTER BUREAU RICHMOND TIMES, 1121 HULL STREET, BEATTIE BLOCK. In the Mayor's Court yesterday morning there were two prisoners who were German tramps. One was a man, the other a boy of fifteen years. They had a pitiful tale of wandering hardship to toll. They were about to be confined in the chain-gang, but his Honor considering all the circumstances, and especially the fact that they were only passing through the city when taken up, gave them thirty minutes in which to leave the city. Before starting the boy asked for a drink, com-plaining of dizziness. While at the hydrant plaining of dizziness. While at the hydrant he fainted. As soon as he recovered they continued their journey.

Friday afternoon Mr. E. J. Andrews, while at work in the planing mill of Messrs. DuVai & Robinson, near the Petersborg railroad (formerly the Manchester Planing Mill), met with a very painful accident. While at work at the matcher he had the ends of two of his fingers of the right hand cut off. Dr. William P. Matthews was summoned and rendered the necessary medical attention. District Deputy Grand Master W. H. Snead, accompanied by Grand Marshal W. E. Smith, Grand Warden R. P. Smith, Grand Treasurer E. S. Moody, Grand Secretary C. P. Waithail, Past Grand G. W. Roach, E. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

at the Unveiling of the Memorial.

I have to answer the question, Why is it that we have come hither to-day to pay honor to Lowell's memory?

One obvious and true reason, though it is far from being the only reason, will suggest itself to any one who visits this ancient Abbey and pauses at the Poet's Corner. In the long line of filustrious men whose monuments make that a place of pilgrimage for all our race, of the great masters who have handed down the torch of literature from Chaucer to the great masters who have handed down the torch of literature from Chaucer to Tennyson, there is not one, I think, who would not acknowledge in Lowell a kindred spirit. There is hardly one of them who was more clearly marked out by innate qualities of mind and character for the calling—I may venture to say the high calling—of a man of letters. There is no one, I think, who has ever taken up that calling with more entire devotion. Lowell had inherited no stinted share of up that calling with more entire devotion. Lowell had inherited no stinted share of the spirit of great predecessors. A true poet, who always spoke from his heart, and therefore always spoke nobly, and one of the most delightful essayists in the language, he might claim no mean place in their ranks. Of those great men many would admit that they had found no more pentirative and symmathetic no more penetrative and sympathetic reader of the deepest thought than Lowell. I speak as though they were still among us. For Lowell always thought and spoke of them not as men long dead and gone, but as of friends with whom he held daily converse. When he discoursed upon the Elizabethan dramatists, one might fancy that he had just parted from Shakspeare and Ben Jonson at the door of the Globe Theatre, and was about to join them for a supper of the gods at the Mermaid Tavern. This power was derived from a rare combination of qualities. A trained student and a thorough scholar, he delighted even in the minutiae of criticism, in philological and grammatical niceties, and in the delicate canons of versificaand in the deficate canons of versing tion. He had, too, the voracious appetite of your true book-worm; he was a man born to grapple with libraries, and to absorb and assimilate whole literatures. No Dryasdust of them all could have a more ardent love of antiquarian research, though no man was less of what we generally mean by a Dryasdust. A Dryas dust is, as Lowell has said, an conscious humerist." a man who is the slave, not the master of his fancies; and who, in the ardor of curiosity-hunting, has lost the due sense of the relative importance of things. From any such weakness Lowell was preserved not less by his imaginative sympathy than by his inimitable gift of humor. As a true humorist he could perceive that there were bores three or four hundred years ago, and knew that a bore does not cease to be a bore because he has been left upon dusty shelves through the inter-vening centuries. He was therefore the master, not the slave of his fancles; and if for a moment he could play with them, If for a moment he could play with them, he could always take us into his confidence with a quiet smile which showed that he knew the real worth of his treasures. To such powers it was owing that Lowell has not been equalled since the days of the congenial Charles Lamb in that criticism that has been called the lovers' criticism. lovers' criticism, the irresistible appre-ciation of old writers, which springs from similarity of heart and character.--

From Harper's Weekly.

Jules Verne's Taste in Novels. In the course of a conversation with R. H. Sherard on his life and work, reported in McClure's Magazine for January, Jules in McClure's Magazine for January, Jules Verne says: "Diy object has been to depict the earth, and not the earth alone, but the universe, for I have sometimes taken my readers away from the earth, in the ovel. And I have tried at the same time to realize a very high ideal of beauty of style. It is said that there can't be any style in a novel of adventure, but that isn't true; though I admit that it is very much more difficult to write such a novel in a good literary form than the studies of character which are so in vogue to-day. And let me say"—here Jules Verne slightly raised his broad shoulders- "that ellightly raised his broad shoulders— "that I am no very great admirer of the psychological novel, so-called, because I don't see what a novel has to do with psychology, and I can't say that I admire the so-called psychological novelists. I except, however, Daudet and De Maupassant. For De Maupassant I have the very highest admiration. He is a man of genius, who has received from heaven the genius, who has received from heaven the gift of writing everything, and who produces as raturally and easily as an appletree produces apples. My favorite author, however, is, and always has been, Dickens, I don't know more than a hundred words of English, and so have had to read him in translation. But I declare to you, sir"—Verne laid his hand upon the table with emphasis—"that I have read the whole of Dickens of Least ter. read the whole of Dickens at least ten times over. I cannot say that I prefer read the whole of Dickens at least tentimes over. I cannot say that I prefer him to Maupassant, because there is no comparison possible between the two. But I love him immensely, and in my forthcoming novel. P'tit Bonhomme,' the proof of this is given and aeknowledgement of my debt is made. I am also and have always been a great admirer of Cooper's novels. There are fifteen of these which I consider immortal."

It is told of Hannah More that she had a good way of managing tale-bearers. It is said that whenever she was told anyis said that whenever she was told anything derogatory to another her invariable reply was, "Come, we will go and ask if this be true." The effect was sometimes judicrously painful. The tale-bearer was taken aback, stammered out a qualification, or begged that no notice might be taken of the statement. But the good lady was inexorable; off she took the scandal-monger to the scandalized to make inquiry and compare accounts. It is not likely that anybody ever a second time ventured to repeat a gossipy story time ventured to repeat a gossipy story to Hannah More. One would think her method of treatment would be a sure cure for scandal.—Harper's Bazar.
